Workshop in the Attic

Poznań

The architects designed their own studio within a formerly disused attic space in an historic quarter of Poznań. They sought to maximize the space and reveal its character to provide an inspirational working environment whilst allowing clients to experience their style of architecture and design. The original wooden attic rafters have been expressed by creating a physical separation between them and new divisions within the space. This separation is emphasized by introducing flush white walls, cabinetry and office furniture creating a clear contrast between the old and new. 17 new windows were installed to provide the previously dark attic with natural light and a view of the neighborhood beyond the rooftops. Nothing in this office pretends to be something else; what is visible is either the architects' work or the building's original construction.
